Personal Essay:

Julie Keil promoted hydropower as a renewable energy technology and a responsible steward of the nation’s water resources. Through her leadership, courage and strength, she helped bring disparate and often dissenting individuals together to work towards common goals. Her keen negotiating skills helped to create outcomes that reflected fair dealing and the intricate relationship among engineering, the environment and economics. She brought uncommon energy, persistence and enthusiasm to all her efforts on behalf of the industry. How do you feel you emulate these characteristics and how will you put those to work within the hydropower industry?
